My Dear Madam,

I have to entreat your forgiveness for the great neglect that has taken place since I last did myself the pleasure of writing to you, but I fully expected to see Mr. Malero in Chatham and intended writing and sending a small Parcel by him, which I informed him when I saw him in London, I am much hurried in writing this, as the Frank is but this moment brought, and the Post leaves us in half an hour

Mr. Taylor desires his love, and begs me to assure you it will always give him pleasure to prove his Brotherly Affection in every way possible. He adds that he long ago spoke of the injustice that took place relative to the Unfortunate Property at Dublin, if you should find it within the limits of popularity to take so long a journey as this, I can only say I should feel much gratified, it is more strange that Henry as never once written in reply to his Brothers frequent Letters, my little Ann and Henry are well, as I trust are the whole of your little ones, you must my dear Madam excuse the shortness of this Letter, your Brother would have written, but was obliged to the Custom House on business we both unite in best wishes to Mr. Johnston yourself &c I remain more truly Your sincere Friend &c
